international commercial transactions with your trusted partners. Opt for documentary remittance from the Crédit Agricole Group.

BASIC PRINCIPLES

Documentary remittance consists, for the exporter, of instructing your bank to obtain payment from the importer in exchange for bank documents.

It brings neutral third parties in to intervene in the commercial contract, namely: the importer's bank and the exporter's bank.

The banks' mandate

The exporter's bank will receive from its client the importer's mandated documents (billing, transport document, etc.) from a bank's intermediary.

The exporter's bank does not cover the risk of the importer's insolvency or its bank, nor the linked "risk country".

The importer's bank receives instructions from the exporter's bank to only supply the documents to the importer in return for its:

- payment "documents against payment" (D/P)
- commitment to pay on a deadline (brought into effect by an accepted deal which may be validated)
 "documents against acceptance" (D/A)

The importer's bank does not cover the importer's insolvency upon the payment deadline unless the deal is validated.

A practice governed by a unique international regulation

The Uniform Rules for Collections (RUE 522 from the International Chamber for Commerce).

YOUR NEEDS

Your commercial partner is a trusted partner with whom you have regular contact,

You would like to find an alternative to documentary credit.

BENEFITS

Importer

- You only pay upon receiving the documents allowing the clearance of the goods,
- You do not use your banking credit lines (unless the deal is endorsed).

Exporter

- You initiate the implementation of the documentary remittance,
- You are assured that the importer cannot take possession of the goods without payment,
- You benefit from a more flexible and less expensive payment tool than documentary credit.
